Ultima Thule - A distant destination and the northernmost region of the habitable world, as thought of by ancient geographers.

In the north time slows down. Distances from place to place grow longer, although seeming shorter than a cab ride in busy downtown traffic. People come out of their shells and reservations shatter away, as locals openly welcome one to take a peek into their lives. Seemingly close, yet light years away from the hectic city life. Inspired by the stories, we departed on a journey to the tip of our continent, all the way to the Arctic sea.

Mikkel Ole Johansen Eira
Born and raised in Kautokeino.

The Raglan Parka is the workhorse of our collection and a true all-around winter jacket. Made to withstand heavy abuse, yet remain classy. New styles for this season come in corduroy and wool fabrics,
along with the new colors
North Sea and Navy.

The term "Tundra" is used when referring to tree growth that is hindered by low temperatures and when the soil is permanently frozen. Humans have a tough time dealing with such conditions. This is why we made a jacket to stand them, The Down Parka. And don't worry, the vents let you blow out the excess steam.

The Herder collection is inspired by the indigenous people that have inhabited Lapland since prehistoric times. From coastal fishing to reindeer herding, they've prospered in the roughest of environments from generation to generation.

An aurora is a natural light display in the sky, particularly in the Arctic regions. These dancing lights are caused by the collision of energetic charged particles with atoms, in the high altitude atmosphere. The charged particles originate in the magnetosphere, and are directed by the Earth's magnetic field into the atmosphere. In northern latitudes, the effect is known as the aurora borealis (or the northern lights), named after the Roman goddess of dawn, Aurora, and the Greek name for the north wind, Boreas, by Pierre Gassendi in 1621.

Born before any religion, shamanism is ancient wisdom from a time when life revolved in harmony around nature and its terms. Instead of worshipping something, shamans seek inner strength from the spiritual world. As religions are in a time of transition, and far from providing the security they used to, today's people are turning back to shamanic-like teachings to find inner peace.

Indigo is the deep blue lying between blue and violet. Originally discovered in India, it has been a natural dye extracted from plants and is among the oldest dyes to be used for textile dyeing and printing. It was Isaac Newton who first introduced indigo as a spectral color. He shone a narrow beam of sunlight through a prism to produce a rainbow-like band of colors on a wall. Naming seven colors, one of them Indigo.

Monte Rosso, also known as Punavuori, is an old workers neighbourhood in Helsinki. After the new location and growth of Helsinki in the 18th century, Punavuori became the area next to the center. During the 19th century the district had a seedy reputation. Most of the brothels and beerhouses were found in Punavuori, as the area was habited by the workers from the close by shipyard. This is where the Makia offices are situated at present.
